For example, the microbiota-mediated compound yield of n-butanol has been reported in *m*asses of human gut contents [bb0080]. Nevertheless, the microbiota-mediated compound yield and their relative patterns were often similar in single and in pooled human faeces. Lactobacilli are one of the most abundant microbiota species in the human gut, but less is known about their influence on the microbiota-mediated compound yields. A study in a conventional human stool culture model showed that Lactobacillus reuteri could enhance the production of five microbial metabolites from dietary dl-rhamnose, whereas Lactobacillus gasseri and Lactobacillus delbrueckii could enhance only the production of lactate from dl-rhamnose [bb0025]. Another study performed with human faeces-derived microbiota assessed the effect of the lactobacilli Lactobacillus salivarius and Lactobacillus casei, which showed that L. salivarius was more

Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an apparatus and method for measuring optical properties, particularly optical transmittance. 2. Description of the Prior Art It is desirable to measure optical properties of a sample of liquid, such as for use in monitoring the purity of a pharmaceutical formulation. The optical properties of the formulation must be measured over a broad range of wavelengths, e.g., from the UV to the near-IR, so that materials such as the formulation may be characterized effectively and accurately. Various schemes have been devised for probing optical properties of liquids. One such scheme measures scattered light with a photodetector, whereas another makes use of coherence techniques. The present invention features an apparatus and method for measuring the optical properties of a sample of liquid, such as a sample of a pharmaceutical formulation. The apparatus and method can be used for a broad wavelength range. The present invention is directed to an apparatus for measuring optical properties of a sample
