

"This is the most detailed, most realistic simulation of live football you can find," said David Rutter, FIFA lead gameplay designer. "The HyperMotion Technology which powers FIFA 22 allows us to develop the game around highly intuitive, flexible gameplay where the decisions you make impact the outcome." Highlights of HyperMotion technology include: – Managed ball position: In real-life, players can move in any direction around the pitch, but in the game, players will always keep the ball close to their body to provide a more stable base for accurate skills, accurate passing and timed runs. – Sensitivity and natural motion: Players will have the ability to control the ball with more sensitivity and natural motion so that any movement an opponent makes will feel more natural. – Ground-breaking collision: Players will realistically react to body collisions in different styles of tackles, including the ability to angle their tackle or slide to avoid contact. This enables players to make more intricate, cerebral decisions around contact. – Ground Physics: The in-game playable surface will react with players' feet. It will absorb the ball, and react with the players' feet to provide additional ball control and intelligence. – Performance, feelings and emotions: Players will look a lot more alive with animations that create the feeling of an athlete playing the game. Additionally, players will have more emotions, feelings and power in their expressions with more facial capture data. – Goalkeeper dive: Goalkeepers have the ability to dive to recover the ball more naturally, allowing them to play that vital role in goalkeeping. – Ball physics: An accurate representation of the actual physics of the ball, such as the increased body control and movement of the ball when in flight. – Ball sprints: The ball's artificial intelligence will have the ability to splay the ball in different ways, or even kick the ball high in the air at the goal. – Commentary analysis: The game will track the ball's location and trajectory throughout a match, providing visual analysis of the game's key moments. The FIFA video game series has sold over 175 million copies worldwide. FIFA franchise games have won multiple 'Game of the Year' and 'Best Sports Game' awards. FIFA World Cup, FIFA 16 and FIFA 18 were also ranked number one in US G
