What does this mean? For starters, it means that on FIFA Ultimate Team, you have the ability to be as creative as you like and build a team that suits your playing style and the playing style you would like your opponents to play. With the new “HyperMotion Technology,” you can train individual players in the way you desire, and when you play, you can select your preferred engine-speed to match the intensity of the match. The new “IntelliSense” technology, which takes advantage of the collected data, will give you visual and audible feedback while you train. It will also give you feedback for each player, telling you what that player likes to do and how you can use that information to coach that player so they play the way you would like them to. The new technology will also introduce a new kind of training mode, where you will be able to practice against an actual opponent. The player will run in and out of possession with the goalkeeper on the other side of the field, attempting to counter your attacking or defending style. It will be a new way to train and reflect on your own game, or how the opposition game. Through the new “HyperMotion Technology,” an opponent will mimic your footwork, run patterns, and give-and-go movements, if you select the specific data to be collected. If, for example, you are good at playing the ball with your left foot up-field, your opponent will play with his right foot forward, so when you make a run up the field towards your own goal, he will be ready to close you down. He will try to force you to go one way or the other, forcing you to use the body shape you use when your opponents are trying to work you out. “With the new ‘HyperMotion Technology,’ we’ve brought the human element back to football and made the game move just like real-life football,” said Alex Josef Kormann, Product Manager on the PES development team. “Using the gaming technology of ‘HyperMotion Technology,’ we can give players that feel like they’re playing against the very best players in the world. We can ensure every player feels unique and every team feels like it has its own personality.” AI In PES 2012, AI became a major focus for the Series. As the Series matured, the AI
