The crockery and the linen and the kilts and trousers all have that 'home' feeling about them. The house has that 'at home' feeling. The garden and the herbaceous borders and the lawn all look so pretty. And the trees are just happy-cheerful-flowerful all the time and the sky seems ever so blue and lovely. Dawn was all of that. And on top of that, she smelled of roses. And strawberries. And cherries. And orange blossom. The scent of oranges is one of my favourite scents. She has a couple of my cousins visiting next week, and they have called to say that they want to come for supper when they get here. I know they mean well and are not just being nosey but I will be sad to see them go. I don't actually like the house very much at all and they have been here for longer than I have. They haven't made much of it. In fact, they have spent the time feeling hostile and ill at ease. That is not something I want them to experience at my home. If I were to choose anywhere for them to stay it would be the little house in Balquidder. And this is my home. It is not their home, and it was never meant to be theirs. I love this home. I can't imagine the house without the people I love being in it. But I think I can imagine how it would be if I did not love Dawn. Because this house was never meant to be a home for her. It was meant to be a shrine, a temple. It was meant to be the place where I would honour Dawn. And I did. We will always honour her, and this house, and all of it, will always feel like the place where she was.)\ & & $8\times 10^{\{-10 b7e8fdf5c8
