This invention relates to a catalyst that is suitable for use in the production of ethylene oxide, particularly ethylene oxide from ethylene. The catalysts that are presently available for use in the reaction of ethylene with oxygen to form ethylene oxide are generally suitable for producing only a relatively dilute feed solution (i.e. one in which the ethylene concentration is on the order of less than about 0.1 mole per 100 mL of feed solution). It is not economically feasible to transport a solution containing more than about 0.1 mole per 100 mL of ethylene. The catalysts that are presently available for use in the reaction of ethylene with oxygen to form ethylene oxide are generally not suitable for use in the production of a highly concentrated feed solution (i.e. one in which the ethylene concentration is on the order of greater than about 1.0 mole per 100 mL of feed solution). One of the problems that is encountered when attempting to manufacture such a feed solution is that the acetaldehyde produced by side reactions tends to scavenge the ethylene from the feed solution. As a result, the concentration of ethylene in the feed solution is undesirably reduced. The present invention provides a means for overcoming the problems noted above. The present invention provides a catalyst that is suitable for use in the production of ethylene oxide from ethylene. The present invention also provides a catalyst that is suitable for use in the production of ethylene oxide from ethylene that has a high ethylene concentration, i.e. a high ethylene concentration feed solution. In addition, the present invention provides a means for overcoming the problems noted above. The present invention provides a catalyst that is suitable for use in the production of ethylene oxide from ethylene that can be used to produce a highly concentrated feed solution
