Complete inactivating mutations c.575G>A (p.Gly192Arg) and c.1106C>T (p.Arg369Cys) of the CASA1 gene: clinical and biochemical findings and response to enzyme replacement therapy. The CASA1 gene is a member of the human carboxylesterase gene family and has recently been identified as the defective gene responsible for carboxyl ester lipase deficiency. We describe 2 brothers, of Italian ancestry, with X-linked carboxyl ester lipase deficiency. They presented with failure to thrive and severe hypoglycemia at 4 and 7 months of age, respectively, having absent carboxyl ester lipase activity in plasma and deficient lipoprotein lipase activity in plasma and fibroblasts. These patients were treated with recombinant carboxyl ester lipase that was infused by continuous intravenous infusion at 1.0 mg/kg per 24 h. At follow-up, an increase of >1 SD in height was documented for both patients. We sequenced the CASA1 coding region in these patients and identified the novel mutations c.575G>A (p.Gly192Arg) and c.1106C>T (p.Arg369Cys) that, to our knowledge, are the first missense mutations detected in the CASA1 gene. We found that both mutations were not present in any of the 100 control alleles studied. These findings confirm that these novel mutations represent bona fide disease alleles for X-linked carboxyl ester lipase deficiency.s> 0
